Lessons From the Skein of Geese...

- Friendship
- Togetherness
- Support
- Communication
- We are not alone

When geese fly together, each goose provides additional lift and reduces air resistance for their goose flying behind it.

When a goose flies in the V-formation it requires less effort and energy using the lifting power of its friends.

Geese take turns being the leader, as the front position expends the most energy.

Geese honk at each other to communicate during their long flight.

When one goose drops out of formation, two other geese will follow and protect the down goose until it is able to fly again.
